

Sticking With My Medicines— What Will Work?

Taking your medicine for depression as directed by your doctor is an important part of managing your symptoms.

Not taking your medicine for depression as directed by your doctor means:

- Your medicine may not work the way it should.
- Depression symptoms may return.
- Your mood may not be as stable as you would like.
- Your symptoms may not be as well controlled.

“I’m so busy that I often forget to take my medicine.”

Taking more than one medicine at different times each day can be hard. One key is to create a routine that fits your life:

- When possible, make taking your medicines part of your daily habits, like in the morning when brushing your teeth or in the evening with dinner. Talk to your doctor about a routine.

“I sometimes want to stop taking my medicine because of side effects.”

- It is important to talk with your doctor about any and all side effects you might be experiencing on your therapy. Don’t wait until your symptoms get to a point where you decide to stop taking your medicine.
- Your doctor may be able to make changes in your medicines or how you take them.

If you forget doses often, these tips may help you remember:

- Use a pill box marked with the days of the week. Take it with you when you are away from home.
- Wear a watch. Set an alarm.
- Leave yourself a note on the bathroom mirror.
- Keep your medicine in a place where you will see it daily.

If you forget to refill your medicine on time:

- Mark a calendar with “Refill on [date]”. Choose a date about a week before you will run out.
- Make sure you have enough refills to last you until your next doctor visit.
- Ask your pharmacy to send you reminders to refill your prescription.

Be sure to see your doctor regularly, especially when you first start taking depression medicine. Use a journal to keep track of how you feel. Bring your journal with you to each doctor visit.
